Senator proposes heritage act for governors' hometowns

A legislator wants to allow the hometowns of the state's governors to put up special highway signs, something he said would preserve Kansas heritage.

Sen. Derek Schmidt, R-Independence, is sponsoring the proposed "Governors of Kansas Hometown Heritage Act." He has filed a bill for introduction when the 2004 Legislature convenes Jan. 12.

"We've never really done anything that tells about the communities that nurtured and produced our governors," he said.

The bill would require the secretary of transportation to develop a special highway sign for governors' hometowns, consulting with the secretary of commerce, the Kansas State Historical Society, the Arts Commission and the Humanities Council. Each sign would carry a logo chosen in a contest.

A community would have to ask for the signs, and private gifts would pay for the signs, not the state.

Also, a governor's hometown would be the community in which he or she lived when first elected.

Schmidt said he hit upon the idea while waiting in the reception area of Gov. Kathleen Sebelius's office for a meeting with her. The office features two montages of gubernatorial portraits.

"It struck me how many of them were from southeast Kansas and how many of them were from rural communities," he said.

Thirty communities have been hometowns to the state's 44 governors. The most, four, have come from Wichita, but eight communities can claim more than one chief executive.

Those towns include Independence, home to Alf Landon, the 1936 Republican presidential nominee, and the less well-known Lyman Humphrey, who served as governor in 1889-93.

Sunrise Academy negotiates land purchase for expansion

By TED TAYLOR

Officials from the city of Bel Aire and Sunrise Christian Academy met Dec. 21 to discuss Sunrise's offer to purchase 20 acres of city land south of Bel Aire Recreation.

Academy board member Robert Linstead told the council and mayor of Sunrise's expansion plans which include a new high school, a lighted football field, four practice fields, a soccer field. Eventually a student union, an orphanage and other buildings would be constructed. He said Sunrise would like to continue using the recreation center's main baseball field. The school would be willing to let the recreation center use its fields during the summer. Several of Bel Aire Recreation's existing fields would have to be moved to accommodate Sunrise's development.

Sunrise does not want to lease the property from the city. "No one we have talked with has advised us not to own the land when we expand," Linstead said. "We have $4 million invested in our present school and have plans to invest another $6 million. It is not our plan to cover your land with our buildings.”

Outlining the school's latest proposal, Linstead suggested that Sunrise would not only pay a premium price for the land but would also pay the moving costs for the 4.7 acres of playing fields that the city had received grant money to improve. He said Sunrise would pay up to $10,000 to move the fields and half of any costs up to $40,000 above that.

Council members, O'Neal and City Administrator Richard Gale said an engineering traffic study of 45th Street would be needed to assess the impact of the new high school which would be built north and east of the present school. According to a recent traffic count, during the school's peak traffic times of 7-9 a.m., there were 435 vehicles traveling east and west on 45th Street in front of the school.

The mayor said 45th Street has been already greatly impacted by Stucky Middle School traffic at the four-way stop at 45th and Oliver with school buses, commuters and other traffic. The last traffic count was 500 vehicles during the same school hours as Sunrise. O'Neal expressed his concerns as to the amount of traffic the new high school would generate.

Linstead said that he believes the traffic would not increase at the school and would not be different from now. Access roads to the new high school's parking lots would be needed from 45th Street North and 48th Street North. Linstead said traffic off 48th Street could be controlled by the installing a gate at that street onto the campus. He said facilities for younger students are located on the north side of the campus and these children could be dropped off and picked up by parents using the controlled gate located on 48th Street. The gate would only be opened for traffic before and after school. As for after-hours events, Sunrise only schedules four home football games each year and the gate on 48th Street would be open for those events.

After some discussion about the engineering, traffic and roadway study, city officials concurred that the city should share with Sunrise the cost of the study due to future 45th Street projects.

Sunrise Christian Academy has an enrollment of 875 students from kindergarten to grade 12. He said when the enrollment exceeds 1,200 or more, the school would probably start a sister

Several fund-raisers planned to benefit Big Brothers

By TED TAYLOR

Lari Heineman, recruitment coordinator for Big Brothers-Big Sisters of Sedgwick County spoke Dec. 16 to the Bel Aire City Council.

Heineman thanked the Bel Aire Police Department for its participation in the Kevin Easter Cops For Kids and the Bowl for Kid's Sake programs. More than 40 law enforcement and affiliated agencies in Kansas are boosters and supporters of the Cops for Kids program.

The Kevin Easter Cops for Kids program is named for Sedgwick County Sheriff's Deputy Kevin Easter who was killed in the line of duty Jan. 8, 1996. Easter was only 24 when a 14-year-old shot him. The shooting happened after a foot chase and a scuffle between Easter and the youth who grabbed the deputy's gun, then shot and killed him.

In the eight years since Easter's tragic death and the naming of the program in his honor, the program has become well known throughout Kansas. This year, more than 600 at-risk children received benefits from the program. It is the goal of BBBS of Sedgwick County to match an additional 900 at-risk children on its waiting list.

Besides donations from local supporters and the United Way, BBBS has several fund-raising events. The Bowl for Kid's Sake is the largest community-wide fund-raiser in Kansas. The program generates a third of the annual operating budget for BBBS. Eighty percent of the budget supports program-related activities. This year, 562 bowlers representing 33 law enforcement agencies and supporters raised more than $85,000 in pledges. Weaver Manufacturing of Wichita gave $10,000 to sponsor the bowling event.

Other donations for the 2003 Kids Bowl were received from private individuals that included family and friends of Kevin Easter, area law enforcement agencies from the county, state and federal, city and federal government entities and area corporations.

Funds received from this event enabled BBBS to help pay the expenses to match 62 at-risk children with representatives of law enforcement in Sedgwick County. This number in-academy at a different location. Long-range plans for the school include dormitories for international students.

In other discussions, Linstead told the council that if the city and Sunrise could not work out a purchase of local land, Sunrise would have to purchase property not located in Bel Aire. He said the school had been offered a gift of land in another area and also was looking at other land that amounted to more acres than available in Bel Aire.

The school has received one extension to the deadline for the other properties, Linstead said, but they needed to know before the end of the year if the city would accept the latest offer. He said if possible, the school wanted to stay in Bel Aire, however, it needs to expand now for the future.

Council members expressed desire to keep Sunrise Christian Academy in Bel Aire and, after some discussion, all council members reached a favorable verbal consensus to Sunrise's latest proposal.

Gale asked Linstead to prepare the school's latest proposal in writing and to include paying to move the playing fields, sharing costs of the engineering for the traffic and road study.

The matter will be an agenda item at the next council meeting Tuesday.

Webb Road railroad crossing to get lights, gates

By TED TAYLOR

With the approval by the Bel Aire City Council on Dec. 16, the city has entered into an agreement with Union Pacific Railroad, Sedgwick County and the Kansas Department of Transportation to install lights and gates at the railroad crossing on North Webb Road.

The crossing is about two miles north of 45th Street North in the Bel Aire city limits.

Webb Road is a four-lane roadway and carries a large number of local and commuter traffic. Union Pacific studied the need for lights and gates before Bel Aire annexed this section of North Webb.

There are few houses in the area but the crossing is a short distance from land on Greenwich Road that Bel Aire has been annexed and set aside as an industrial complex. The rail line crossing is just north of the proposed complex just north of Jabara Airport. One of the requirements of developers of industrial property is to have available rail and air facilities.

Union Pacific has released no starting date for the project. Two Union Pacific rail crossings in the area on North Woodland and on West 37th Street continue to perplex Bel Aire residents and commuters.

Earlier talks with the city and railroad about repairing the crossing on North Woodland were unproductive. The city has a long-range improvement plan with the state for improving Woodlawn but this project also seems to be stalled.

Because of its location and the shared responsibility with Wichita and Bel Aire, repairing the crossing and roadway on West 37th Street would be a joint project with the state, Wichita, Union Pacific, and Bel Aire.

This Union Pacific rail crossing on North Webb Road is scheduled for an upgrade in 2004.

cludes community, site and school-based matches as well as other funds that were used to match 172 children on the waiting list.

A special Big For A Day Event enabled these children to be matched with 134 area officers for one day. The kids and cops enjoyed activities which included attending Wichita State basketball and baseball, Wichita Stealth Indoor Arena football, the Wichita Aviation Festival and fishing at the Fraternal Order of Police Lake. In December, more than 300 children attended the program's Christmas party held at the Crown Uptown Dinner Theater. Each child received a gift from Santa.

Special crime prevention programs that are also funded through Kevin Easter Cops for Kids served 168 Sedgwick County children. These programs are Youth Connections, Youth

Milford students adopt Iraqi school

By GAIL PARSONS

Children at Milford Elementary School have reached out to help their fellow students.

They've never met the students whom they chose to help, kids who live a half a world away.

The children have adopted a school in Iraq. In some ways, the school is much like their own. Both are small: Milford has 72 students, their adopted school has about 100. Both have children who want to learn. Children at both schools like to play and have hopes and dreams for the future.

But that's where the similarities stop. When Milford teacher Megan Myrick showed pictures of the Iraqi children and their school to her students, they had a lot of questions and concerns. They were shocked at the condition of the school building.

"The first-graders noticed that the roof was broken. They wanted to know what they do when it rains. They saw there are no doors, no playground," she said.

Her husband, Lt. Taran Myrick, of the 300th Military Police Unit at Fort Riley, is stationed near the school, about 45 minutes south of Baghdad.

He brainstormed the idea of Milford adopting the school. When Megan brought the idea to the staff and the students they didn't hesitate - they wanted to help.

"The children, they don't deserve what happened. They don't deserve to be treated (bad)" 8-year-old Memphis Harter said. "I brought scissors and four glue sticks because I think these people need some help learning." She said she wanted to show the school that she and children in America care about them.

The students in Milford quickly compiled 100 pounds of school supplies, then 200 pounds. The students soon learned they had collected 388 pounds of construction paper, glue, rulers, scissors and other items the children can use in school.

Soon a shipment from a school with clean floors, well-lighted rooms and plenty of books and paper will be made to a school with bare and cracked walls and no cupboards filled with supplies.

Chelsea French, 11, looked around at what she had compared with the Iraqi children.

"I brought 500 sheets of construction paper, some scissors, some glue, and some pencils," she said. "I thought I had a lot of stuff, then I thought I could give some away. They barely have any school supplies."

She said she would feel bad if she couldn't go to school, and she knows the Iraq children must like school, too.

Spc. Daniel Good returned from Iraq a few weeks ago and said what the children at Milford are doing works hand-in-hand with the military's mission.

"These supplies are going to help quite a bit," he said. "(In Iraq) they all have real good intentions, but they don't have a lot of supplies and means to educate themselves."

The children, and maybe the teachers, will start exchanging letters soon.

Zebra mussel numbers up sharply at El Dorado Lake

The state's only known population of zebra mussels has increased dramatically, and a state biologist said El Dorado Lake's infestation of the pesky mollusks is likely to get worse.

"The news isn't good," said Tom Mosher, an aquatic research biologist for the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks. "Zebra mussels are pretty much everywhere in the lake."

Officials lowered the water level 31/2 feet in an effort to expose and kill the mussels, which were first found at the lake in late August. While the mussels exposed by the draw-down are dying, Mosher fears many more are thriving within the lake.

The mussels were living as far down as 17 feet this fall.

Last week, Mosher and a team of investigators found at least 200 mussels per square meter in many areas of the lake. In the summer, the concentration was about 55 per square meter and the mussels were largely confined to the southern parts of the lake.

One zebra mussel can produce up to 100,000 larvae, Mosher said.

"It'll probably just keep getting worse and worse for the next five years or so; then they may start to die out," he said. "It's a new ballgame here; we just don't know what we're going to have

Kansas aviation industry preceded Wrights' first flight

By JOEL MATHIS

There was an aviation industry in Kansas before there was aviation.

In 1900 – three years before the Wright brothers flew their airplane at Kitty Hawk, N.C. – Carl Dryden Browne built an airplane factory in Freedom, Kan.

He never flew an aircraft. In 1902, Browne's factory closed. North Carolina became known as the "Birthplace of Flight."

But today, Kansas, not North Carolina, is known as the "Air Capital of the World." Since 1919, according to state estimates, more than a quarter-million aircraft have been built in Kansas, mostly in Wichita.

"When I speak to people, I say (we) call Wichita the air capital of the world," said Teresa Day, director of the Kansas Aviation Museum in Wichita. "But Kansas, overall, is the center of it all, not just because we produce the planes, but because of the heritage. From the very earliest days we had innovators producing just fabulous aircraft."

The evolution of flight is illustrated in two models in the Statehouse office of Lt. Gov. John Moore, a former Cessna executive: One is a model of the Wright Flyer, the other of a Cessna Citation X business jet. Moore said he also saw a sense of the spirit of entrepreneurs who came to Wichita with the goal of going higher and faster.

"What you have to remember is, as they were building aircraft, they were learning to fly," Moore said.

Today, the aircraft industry in Kansas provides 18 percent of the state's manufacturing jobs. More than 32,000 people in Wichita alone are employed by Boeing, Cessna, Raytheon and Bombardier/Learjet. An additional 1,000 people are employed at a Honeywell avionics plant in Olathe.

"There's no question it's a very important industry in Kansas – particularly in south-central Kansas," said Steve Kelly, director of business development for the Kansas Department of Commerce and Housing.

It began with oil money, a flatter-than-a-pancake landscape and a convergence of mechanical talent.

The air revolution started slowly, though.

It wasn't until 1911, eight years after the Wright brothers' flight, that Albin K. Longren of Topeka built and flew the first airplane made in Kansas.

He promptly disappeared into history. "By the late teens, oil was discovered in Butler County," Day said. "So there was money to be thrown at the aircraft industry."

One of the early oilmen was Jake Moellendick. In 1920, he partnered with E.M. "Matty" Laird, and they started building Swallow aircraft in Wichita – 43 between 1920 and 1923. An industry was born.

"The Swallow aircraft was the first plane specifically made for production," Day said. "That was sort of the benchmark."

But why Kansas? After all, Moellendick was from Oklahoma, Laird from Chicago.

There are differing theories.

"We have a lot of days of sunshine and flying weather, days where it's possible to fly planes, as well as wind giving relative lift to planes," said Bernie Koch, vice president of communications for the Wichita Area Chamber of Commerce.

"It's flat and provides you with lots of opportunities for runways – in case you have any problems, you can land pretty quickly," said Jessica Myers, a spokeswoman for Cessna Aircraft Co. in Wichita.

Craig Miner, a business history professor at Wichita State University, doesn't buy it.

"People have tried to talk me into saying that we had a flatter landscape or better weather, but that could've been Oklahoma," he said. "It was just pure promotion. There was no reason."

Miner said Marcellus Murdoch, editor of the Wichita Eagle during those early years, reputedly made the Eagle the first American newspaper to own an airplane.

"He was willing to promote 'air-mindedness' in Wichita, make it seem exciting," Miner said.

Wichita was not alone as an aviation community in the early days, but it was the most successful.

Longren built planes in Topeka from 1911 to 1926, making the first successful flight of a Kansas-built plane in Kansas on Sept. 2, 1911.

In Girard starting in 1908, Henry Call built more than a dozen aircraft, but only one ever flew.

But Swallow built more than airplanes; it gave some aviation names a start. Lloyd Stearman, Clyde Cessna and Walter Beech were among those manufacturing Swallows. All went on to form their own airplane manufacturing companies.

"They built a cadre of skilled people who knew how to do aircraft work," Miner said. "There started to be enough critical mass that new companies started to be attracted by others."

The fledgling industry slumped, with the rest of the economy, during the 1930s. But it was solidified and saved by World War II and the Cold War that followed.

It wasn't an accident. As war loomed, the state formed the Kansas Industrial Development Commission, which "camped out in Washington and really lobbied to have (defense-related) manufacturing done in the Midwest," Miner said.

During World War II, more than 50,000 people in Wichita were working in aviation and related industries, churning out bombers and other warplanes – up from fewer than 6,000 in 1939.

"The population of Wichita basically doubled during those years, from 100,000 to 200,000," Miner said. "It was a big thing."

During World War II, Boeing employed more than 29,000 people, building gliders and the B-29 Superfortress, the plane that dropped atomic bombs on Japan. Top production was reached in 1945, when 4.2 bombers rolled out daily.

However, when the war ended, thousands of workers lost their jobs, including more than 16,000 in one day at Boeing.

But the industry survived and thrived.

And the more airplane manufacturers concentrated their business in Kansas, the more other manufacturers and suppliers wanted to move here as well.

"Despite the fact the industry is global, there are advantages to having proximity to a concentration of manufacturers," Kelly said. "That puts them in range where they can more effectively interface with companies in Wichita and the surrounding area."

The result: airplane manufacturing became more than a business. It's now as much a part of the Kansas cultural fabric as farming.

"We have a lot of people who have their father, their brother, their cousin, whoever it might be working here," said Cessna's Myers. "We've had people who've had four generations working here."

Through the years, the industry has gone through cycles of fat prosperity and dangerously lean times that resulted in the layoffs of thousands of Kansas workers.

The post-Sept. 11 era has been example of the latter. Proving how important a role it plays, tough times in aviation ripple through the rest of the state's economy.

"It's been a tough two or three years," Kelly said. "I think what people miss is when Boeing is hurting, or Cessna or Bombardier, it's tough for those folks – but it also filters out throughout the rest of the chain."

Kelly said the state's air industry may in the future focus less on manufacturing and more on refurbishing the planes that are already flying.

"A lot of planes are in service for 20, 30 years," Kelly said. "There are a lot of things that can happen. It's been a cyclical business, but there's hope that you could level it out a little bit."

But business experts across the state are also talking about the need to become less dependent on the aviation economy.

"I think the community, as a result of what has happened, understands the need to diversify," Koch said. "It's amazing, but Wichita doesn't even have an industrial park. I think aviation prosperity masked our shortcomings in some of those areas."

El Dorado's zebra mussels are the first in Kansas. Populations have been found recently in two Oklahoma river systems.

The highly prolific mussels are known to out-compete native mussels and small fish for food in many waters. They've also caused millions of dollars of damage by clogging intake structures for water supply plants.

Biologists think zebra mussels or their larvae are transported from place to place in water or vegetation hauled by ships, boats or boat trailers.

First brought to the Great Lakes region in bilge water from barges in the late 1980s, the unwanted European mussels quickly spread through that region and down connecting river systems.

While larvae have been found in the Walnut River below El Dorado's dam, Mosher hopes humans won't aid the spread to other lakes. The Wildlife and Parks department has begun an educational program with signs warning anglers and boaters not to transport water or vegetation from El Dorado to other lakes.

Such public education and involvement has worked in other states. Mosher said Minnesota has kept zebra mussels confined to two inland lakes for about 10 years.

"They've done a good job of confinement," Mosher said. "But in Minnesota, they're fining people up to $1,000 for transporting water or vegetation attached to your boat trailer."

He said Kansas currently has no such penalties. Kurt Bookout, El Dorado director of public utilities, said a fall check of intake pipes in the lake showed no signs of zebra mussels. None have been found within the actual water treatment plant.

Still, he said, officials are getting ready. "We're doing some research with chlorine dioxide," Bookout said. "If needed, we can inject it into the intake structure and kill the larvae."

Bookout said other water plants have successfully used the chemical, which he said poses no threat to consumers, to battle zebra mussels.
